

Secretly, the townspeople were trying so very, very hard to pretend there was no Special Military Operation. They did not really wish their vulgar partying spoiled by criminals and Mobniks returning home making them feel uncomfortable and the streets look untidy. Could they not just go and holiday in North Korea like normal people?

Finally, the Tsar himself wished to see the extent of his newly liberated territories on the now infamous war map.

The monster venturing from his bunker.

He took with him The Drunk and The Clown who had already admired the map. As soon as Shoigu and Gerasimov saw the Tsar approach, they went on working faster than ever although they still did not pin even one solitary Muscovy flag on the map.

