

The Tsar did not smile and looked closely at the empty space. No way would he say that he could not see what The Drunk and The Clown had praised so much. Now everyone strained their eyes hoping to discover something on the war map, but they could see no more than before.

Nevertheless, they all exclaimed, "Oh, how beautiful!" and advised His Comrade Majesty to declare the new territories to always have been part of the glorious Empire. They did not bother about the trivial matter of whether the territories were occupied or not. "Magnificent! Charming! Excellent!" was called out on all sides. Everyone was very cheerful and offered up thanks to Our Lady of Lenin and Saint Stalin.

The Tsar was so pleased that all was going according to The Plan that he presented Shoigu and Gerasimov with the old medal of Hero of the Hammer and Sickle, soaked in the blood of countless generations of innocents.
